Preparations From Maize.

When the maize has been harvested fully matured grains are removed from the cobs and ultimately ground into atta or meal in the same way as bajra meal or atta. Chapaties are made from maize atta in exactly the way as from wheat atta, etc.

Maize is also consumed as a parched product made in the same way as parched bajra or parched rice. In some cases the parched maize may be ground into flour to which water is added, converting the mixture into a kind of porridge, eaten generally in the morning. Milk may also be added to taste. This preparation is known as Sattu and is very popular in the United Provinces and Bihar.

Kichery (Kedloree) may also be made out of maize in the same way as from Bajra or pulses.
